Overall Score: 37/100

The user experience is severely compromised by critical blockers and an overwhelming lack of clarity. With an average score significantly below 60, and widespread negative sentiment and confusion across all participants, the site fundamentally fails to meet basic usability and desirability standards.

Visual & Heuristic Analysis

The visual landscape of Curly Lovers is one of profound disorientation and clutter, severely impeding initial comprehension and engagement. The visual hierarchy is entirely absent; critical branding (logo, navigation) is overshadowed by an intrusive "TIENDA EN EEUU" banner that immediately conflicts with the page's implied "Colombia" context, creating an irreconcilable cognitive dissonance for users. This direct contradiction, coupled with a large, unprofessionally positioned WhatsApp chat bubble, obscures vital product imagery and text, demonstrating a stark disregard for content presentation.

The layout is an embodiment of information overload. Users are barraged with disparate sections (categories, recent products, blog, Instagram) above the fold, all vying for attention without any clear navigational guidance or prioritization. This chaotic presentation undermines the potential for trust and contributes to a generic, amateurish impression.

Trust signals are actively eroded by the geographical ambiguity and the sloppy integration of interactive elements. Instead of conveying professionalism and reliability, the site projects confusion and a lack of polish, which immediately deters users from investing their time or considering a purchase.

Actionable Recommendations

ISSUE: - Catastrophic Geographical Ambiguity and Conflicting Market Information.

* The "TIENDA EN EEUU 🇺🇸 " banner directly contradicts the implied "Colombia" market in the page title and branding, creating immediate and profound confusion for every single user. This fundamental lack of clarity prevents users from quickly determining if the site is relevant to them.

FIX: - Implement an unambiguous, singular market selection strategy. Present a clear, upfront choice or automatically detect and direct users to their most relevant regional store. Remove all conflicting market indicators. The chosen region must be prominently and consistently displayed throughout the user journey, ensuring a seamless and localized experience from the first interaction.

ISSUE: - Egregiously Obtrusive WhatsApp Chat Bubble.

* The large green WhatsApp icon is poorly positioned, actively covering significant portions of product images and critical introductory text. This is a severe visual distraction and a direct impediment to content consumption, forcing users to make extra effort just to see what is being offered.

FIX: - Reposition the chat bubble to a discreet, non-obstructive location. Consider a smaller, less visually dominant icon, or implement a delay/scroll-triggered appearance. Ensure the support mechanism enhances, rather than detracts from, the core shopping experience.

ISSUE: - Severe Information Overload and Visual Clutter.

* The homepage is overwhelmed with too many disparate sections and content blocks presented simultaneously above the fold. This excessive information density creates a jarring "visual cacophony" and makes it impossible for users to quickly scan and understand the core offering, leading to immediate frustration and disengagement.

FIX: - Drastically streamline the homepage's initial presentation. Prioritize a clear value proposition and primary product categories. Utilize ample whitespace to create visual breathing room and guide the user's eye. Employ progressive disclosure for secondary content (e.g., blog posts, social feeds), presenting it further down the page once initial engagement is secured.

ISSUE: - Lack of Professionalism and Engaging Aesthetic.

* The site's overall visual design, cluttered layout, and conflicting information contribute to a perception of being "generic," "amateurish," and "not a sleek vibe." This significantly diminishes desirability and erodes user trust, failing to convey a premium or credible brand image.

FIX: - Undertake a comprehensive visual redesign focusing on modern e-commerce aesthetic principles. Emphasize clean lines, intuitive visual hierarchy, and high-quality, aspirational product photography. Invest in a consistent brand identity that communicates professionalism and resonates with the target audience, transforming the site into a trustworthy and appealing destination.

Detailed User Sessions

Alex

a busy professional with two kids under 5

"I'm trying to figure out if this is a US or Colombian store while my kids are pulling on my pants, and there's a chat bubble covering the first product image – I just need to quickly see what you sell!"

1. My Experience

My immediate thought was "Okay, hair products for curly hair, got it." But then I immediately noticed the "TIENDA EN EEUU" at the top contradicting "Colombia" in the page title. It's confusing right off the bat, and then I see a big WhatsApp bubble blocking a product picture, which is just annoying when I'm trying to quickly scan.

2. Points of Friction

- Conflicting Location Information: The banner saying "TIENDA EN EEUU 🇺🇸 " at the very top right clashes with the page title "Curly Lovers Colombia." As a busy mom, I don't have time to investigate where I can actually buy these products; I need that clear instantly.
- Obtrusive WhatsApp Bubble: The green chat bubble is covering a significant portion of a product image and text right at the top of the product display. It's visually distracting and prevents me from seeing what's being offered without extra effort.
- Information Overload: There's a lot packed onto the page immediately – promotions, recent products, blog posts, category listings – which makes it harder to get a simple, quick overview of the core offering without feeling a bit overwhelmed.

3. What I Think This Is

This page is for an online store called Curly Lovers that sells natural products specifically for curly hair, along with offering tips and advice on curly hair care. It seems to be based in Colombia but also has a store option for the US.

Linda

a business owner with 10 employees

"This page immediately contradicts itself on where it sells, and as a business owner, I don't have time to play a guessing game about geography when I need to quickly source products."

1. My Experience

My immediate reaction is frustration because the first thing I notice is a conflict: the title says "Colombia" but there's a huge "TIENDA EN EEUU" banner. I just need to quickly know what this is about and if it's even relevant to my location or my customers. There's a lot of information crammed in, requiring a lot of scrolling to get a full picture.

2. Points of Friction

The major point of friction is the geographical ambiguity between "Colombia" and "EEUU" right at the top – it makes me question the site's relevance instantly. Beyond that, the page feels a bit overwhelming with so many sections (categories, recent products, best sellers, kits, blog posts, Instagram feed) making it hard to quickly get a concise understanding without dedicating more time than I have. The visual layout feels a bit cluttered, especially with the WhatsApp button overlay.

3. What I Think This Is

I think this is an online store called Curly Lovers that sells a variety of hair care products and accessories specifically designed for curly hair. They also seem to provide hair care tips and have an active community presence. However, I'm unclear if their primary market or shipping capabilities are in Colombia or the United States.

a social influencer and avid shopper

"Seriously, I'm trying to quickly find something inspiring or a new product to showcase, but the conflicting region info and that ugly WhatsApp icon blocking the product image are just wasting my precious scrolling time!"

1. My Experience

Alright, so it's a shop for curly hair products, got it. But the instant contradiction with "TIENDA EN EEUU" at the top and "Colombia" in the page title is jarring; as an avid shopper, I immediately wonder about shipping and currency. The page feels visually busy and a bit generic right off the bat, not the sleek vibe I expect from a brand I might feature.

2. Points of Friction

First, the "TIENDA EN EEUU" banner directly clashing with the "Curly Lovers Colombia" title creates major confusion about their market and logistics. Second, that huge green WhatsApp icon awkwardly covering a good portion of the main curly hair image is a big aesthetic miss – it just looks sloppy and detracts from what should be a strong visual hook. Finally, there's just so much text and so many categories stacked at the top, it feels overwhelming when I'm trying to quickly scan for what's new or noteworthy.

3. What I Think This Is

This is an online store that sells a range of hair care products specifically for curly hair, from shampoos and conditioners to styling creams and accessories. It seems to position itself as specializing in natural ingredients, targeting individuals with curly hair, and appears to be based in Colombia but has a separate presence or shipping option for the US market.

Elizabeth

a highly educated and wealthy individual with deep connections

"I'm not going to spend my valuable time deciphering if this brand is even for my market, let alone sifting through this visual cacophony."

1. My Experience

My immediate impression is one of slight frustration. The page is very busy, almost jarringly so, with a lot of conflicting information at the top. It feels less like a premium shopping experience and more like an overstuffed local brochure.

2. Points of Friction

The very first thing I noticed was the "TIENDA EN EEUU 🇺🇸" banner, which immediately clashes with "Curly Lovers Colombia" in the page title. It's confusing and unprofessional. Then, the large, green WhatsApp bubble obscuring a product image feels incredibly amateurish and distracting. The overall layout is cluttered, with too many disparate elements fighting for attention.

3. What I Think This Is

This appears to be an online store, likely based in Colombia given the currency and certain phrases, that sells various hair care products specifically designed for curly hair. It also offers some related accessories and a blog with tips. It seems to aspire to have a presence in the US, but that's not clearly articulated.
